

HUMAN VALUES IN THE COMMUNITY

Dr. Rekha Mithal¹, Dr. Kamlesh Maharwal², Amit Mithal³

¹Professor, Department of Chemistry, Jaipur Engineering College & Research Centre, Jaipur, India

²Librarian, Jaipur Engineering College & Research Centre, Jaipur, India

³Associate Professor, Department of Computer Science & Engineering, Jaipur Engineering College & Research Centre, Jaipur, India

ABSTRACT:

Without human values, human civilization might not be able to survive very long. It is imperative that we have this conversation and raise awareness of human values in today's culture. Human values serve as both the foundation and tenets of existence. They are necessary for people to behave well. There is no getting around the fact that there are many crises facing the modern global civilization. The contemporary society is well aware of the human worth issue. Values that are fundamental to being human are referred to as basic human values. Since they highlight the underlying goodness of both individuals and society as a whole, values like truth, honesty.

Keywords- Values, society, culture

[1] INTRODUCTION

The idea of human value forms a fundamental cornerstone of modern civilization, directing moral, ethical, and socioeconomic frameworks. Every aspect of our shared existence is shaped by the inherent value of every human, which influences our interactions, policies, and perceptions. This idea is based on the fundamental understanding of human dignity, which cuts across racial, gendered, religious, and socioeconomic divides. This study paper aims to explore the various facets of human value in society in depth within this framework. We want to clarify the significance of human value and its significant consequences for creating a just, egalitarian, and inclusive society through critical analysis and empirical research.

MEANING

The notion of human value is deeply ingrained in the complex fabric of human existence. It forms our interactions, policies, and perceptions and acts as the cornerstone around which our societal institutions are constructed.

In the many-sided woven artwork of human life, the idea of human worth holds significant importance. It fills in as the bedrock whereupon our cultural designs are fabricated and shapes our collaborations, approaches, and discernments.

1. PHILOSOPHICAL PERSPECTIVES ON HUMAN VALUE:

- a. Human Pride: Vital to numerous philosophical casing works is the thought of human respect. Established in the conviction that each individual has intrinsic worth basically by ethicalness of their mankind, human poise fills in as the establishment for common freedoms and moral standards.
- b. Utilitarianism versus Deontological Morals: Philosophical discussions encompassing human worth frequently spin around utilitarianism, which focuses on the best great for the best number ,and deontological morals, which accentuates the innate worth of people and the significance of regarding their freedoms and independence.
- c. Existence: Proponents of this school of thought, such as Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir, emphasize the need for each person to define their own worth and find purpose in an absurdly ridiculous world.

2. SOCIO-ECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS OF HUMAN VALUE:

- a. Labor Market Dynamics: In a capitalist society, economic productivity reduces the worth of human beings, resulting in differences in opportunities and compensation according to perceived utility. The value of human work is facing increasing difficulties due to the rise of automation and artificial intelligence.
- b. Social Hierarchies: Systems of oppression and privilege uphold disparities in the value placed on human life according to racial, gender, sexual, and socioeconomic criteria. It is imperative to tackle systematic discrimination and foster inclusivity in order to acknowledge the equal worth of every individual.
- c. Globalization and Interconnectedness: Recognizing each person's inherent worth, regardless of their citizenship or nationality, is essential to fostering worldwide solidarity and collaboration in a world growing more interconnected by the day.

3. ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS IN VALUING HUMAN LIFE

a. Bioethics: The value of human life is called into question by technological advancements in medicine, especially when it comes to euthanasia, abortion, and end-of-life care. Navigating these complicated difficulties requires striking a balance between ethical ideals and society norms, as well as individual autonomy.

b. The surroundings prompt inquiries The effects of human activity on the worth of non-human living forms and our obligation to future generations. Sustainable cohabitation requires an ecological viewpoint that acknowledges the interdependence of all living things.

c. Social Justice Movements: These movements work to eliminate oppressive structures that devalue particular groups and promote the awareness of the equal value of all people. Putting minority voices and experiences front and center is crucial to creating a society that is inclusive and just. There are many facets to the definition of human value in society, including socioeconomic, philosophical, and ethical aspects. Fostering a culture that promotes the values of justice, equality, and compassion requires acknowledging the inherent worth of every individual, regardless of external indicators of status or productivity.

4. IMPORTANCE OF HUMAN VALUES:

a. Human values serve as the moral compass that directs people and societies toward moral behavior and decision-making, promoting cooperation and trust. This is the foundation of morality.

b. Social Cohesion: Common human values foster harmony and togetherness among varied cultures, overcoming differences in ideology, religion, and culture to foster a sense of mutual respect and belonging.

c. Respect for Diversity: Human values promote an inclusive culture where differences are recognized rather than rejected by encouraging acceptance and appreciation of diversity.

d. Peaceful Conflict Resolution: Respecting human values lessens the possibility of violence and animosity by encouraging empathy, communication, and understanding.

e. Personal Fulfillment: Living a life that is genuine and meaningful is made possible by embracing human values, which foster emotional health, resilience, and personal development.

f. Sustainable Development: Human values establish the foundation for long-term prosperity and sustainable development by highlighting the significance of social fairness, environmental stewardship, and equitable resource distribution.

g. Responsible Citizenship: Promoting responsible citizenship and active civic involvement through the values of honesty, empathy, and compassion promotes social accountability as well as participatory democracy.

h. Empowerment of Marginalized Groups: Human values stand out for the respect and rights of the underprivileged,

i. Ethical Leadership: Integrity and ethical leadership are fostered inside institutions and organizations by leaders who uphold human values. They promote transparency, responsibility, and trust.

j. Intergenerational Equity: Respecting human values means taking into account the rights and needs of future generations and making sure that current actions do not jeopardize their opportunities or well-being.

5. CRISIS OF HUMAN VALUES:

The modern society is facing a crisis of human values that takes many different forms and seriously jeopardizes our moral integrity and social cohesiveness. A lack of empathy, compassion, and regard for human dignity has resulted from the fracturing of common values brought about by rapid globalization, technological innovation, and altering cultural norms. Individualism and materialism frequently put one's own interests ahead of collective well-being, resulting in social isolation and estrangement. Furthermore, systemic injustices exacerbate divides along racial, class, gender, and ideological lines by maintaining inequities and undermining public confidence in institutions. This issue threatens to destroy the basic foundations of human cooperation and interconnectivity, undermining the ideals upon which a just and equitable society is based.

6. SUGGESTIONS:

A number of ideas can be taken into consideration to address the issues that human values in society are currently confronting. Initially, it is crucial to support educational initiatives and awareness campaigns in order to inculcate empathy, tolerance, and respect in children from a young age. Secondly, encouraging cross-cultural communication and understanding to heal rifts and strengthen links between various cultures. Thirdly, promoting laws and programs that put human rights, equality, and social justice first. Fourth, promoting moral leadership and conscientious citizenship to preserve honesty and responsibility at all societal levels.

7. CONCLUSION:

The study of human values in society demonstrates their essential significance in forming our social identities and directing our relationships. It is becoming more and more clear as we work through the complexity of today's issues that preserving fundamental human values is necessary to promote a society that is just, equal, and compassionate. Beyond cultural, religious, and ideological divides, we may foster a culture of mutual respect and solidarity by embracing empathy, honesty, and social responsibility. With coordinated actions at the individual, group, and We may work toward a future where human values serve as the cornerstone of four shared humanities at the institutional and personal levels.

REFERENCES

- [1] Dr. Mohan Debbarma, Associate Professor & Head Department of Philosophy Tripura University.
- [2] Giddens, Anthony, Introduction to Sociology, Seagull Publications, London, 2011, p. 12.
- [3] Blackburn, Simon, Oxford Dictionary of Philosophy, Oxford, 1996, Oxford University.
- [4] Teichmann, Roger, Nature, Reason and the Good Life – Ethics for Human Beings, Oxford.
- [5] Sinha, S.C., Anmols Dictionary of Philosophy, Anmols Publications, New Delhi, 1990, p.
- [6] Tripathy, Preeti, An Introduction to Moral Philosophy, Axis Publications, New Delhi, 2011, p. 1.